What's New In Adobe Photoshop CC?

Republicans' claims that their party is the party of fiscal responsibility are not fooling voters, according to a new poll out Tuesday. Support for the GOP has dropped over the last year, the CNN-ORC poll found, and voters say the GOP is a party of "moral values" and "trying to reduce the size of government." The poll's results are a bit surprising, however, when you consider the substantial overhaul that the GOP is now attempting to enact into law. The bill, which died in the Senate on Saturday, would have cut more than $600 billion from Medicare, Medicaid, food stamps, unemployment insurance and the Affordable Care Act. Republicans and President Trump have regularly claimed that their priorities are fiscally conservative. "The Republican Party, from the beginning, has been the party of fiscal responsibility, of pushing the envelope and tackling our entitlement programs like Medicare and Social Security," Trump said last month. "Look at Obamacare. It's imploding. We won. ObamaCare is a wreck. We won," he added. "We won in one of the biggest political landslides in the history of our country. If we win on November 6th, it's the biggest electoral college win since Ronald Reagan. So they'll probably try to impeach me. They've got to do it." In fact, those claims are not holding up. A hypothetical future where the GOP takes back Congress and Trump's presidency and adopts all the same policies shows that the party's budget priorities are shifting — to the detriment of working class people. When you ask voters what they'd be most concerned about if the GOP took control of the presidency, Senate and House, over half — 52 percent — said they would be worried about federal spending, while only 17 percent said they would be worried about paying more taxes. When the same question was asked of the Democrats, 31 percent said they would be worried about being forced to pay more taxes while only 15 percent expressed concern about the federal government's spending spree. According to the nonpartisan and nonpartisan Center on Budget and Policy Priorities, as the GOP were weighing whether to support the Ryan-Coburn plan, which would have kicked hundreds of billions of dollars away from Medicare and other programs, CBO said the bill would have nearly doubled
